

YOU'RE A JAYHAWK WHEREVER YOU ARE

Student Resources for Unsafe Living Spaces and Online Harassment

You may not be on campus right now, but you're still a Jayhawk. Much of the world is under a stay at home order, and Jayhawks everywhere are learning remotely. While some students may welcome this experience, staying home means some students are living, working, and learning in an unsafe space. If you are experiencing physical, emotional, or sexual abuse at home or online, KU wants to help. Don't know where to start? Call Student Affairs at 785-864-4060 or visit studentaffairs.ku.edu.

- Sexual misconduct, harassment, stalking, intimate partner violence, and domestic abuse are never your fault. To report gender-based violence and connect to resources, contact Institutional Opportunity and Access.
- If you or a friend are experiencing a crisis, consider submitting a CARE report. KU has a team ready to help. Of course, always call 911 if the situation is immediate and life-threatening. Start by visiting studentaffairs.ku.edu.
- Physical harm, bullying, stalking, harassment, retaliation, hazing, and other threatening behaviors are never acceptable – in person or in remote environments. If you or a friend experience any of these behaviors, please report the situation to Student Conduct and Community Standards.
- If you are not sure what you experienced or if you should report it, reach out to KU's CARE Coordinator. The CARE Coordinator is a confidential resource. Other KU resources are always willing to talk, but may be required to report the incident. We're here to help with tricky people and uncomfortable situations.

When survivors of physical, sexual, or emotional violence are required to stay at home with their abuser, their safety is compromised. With uncertainty about COVID-19, survivors may feel lost on how to seek safe alternative shelter, support resources, or report abuse. If social distancing is forcing you to stay with someone who hurts you (physically or emotionally), please contact KU or community resources. If you are not in Lawrence, the KU resources below can help identify local resources in your area.
